Southampton Has New Woman Cop in Miss de Milhau

First in the County and Speeders and Indelicate Bathers Beware.

Special to THE SUN AND NEW YORK MERALD. SOUTHAMPTON, L. I., July 18 .- Southampton has an innovation, and an im portant one, in the shape of a woman police officer, the first to bedsworn in in Suffolk county. She is Miss Zella de Milhau daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis J de G. de Milhau of New York, identifled with Southampton in summer for many years and most popular in the

Miss Zella de Milhau, of an old French family, equipped the ambulance donated by Southampton's citizens, both the summer and winter colonies, during the war, and drove it herself in France, doing marvellous work for which the Government awarded to her the Croix de On a trip to England at the beginning of the war Miss de Milhau also obtained splendid results at recruiting, her spirit of cheerfulness and interesting personality carrying her far.

Miss de Milhau was sworn in yester day. She receives no salary, having offered her services gratis. She will wear her overseas uniform while on duty and will use her motorcycle part of the time. That she will hold her own even against Southampton's male officers is a fore-gone conclusion. In future there is little danger of any member of the fair sex tonning an abbreviated bathing suit or attempting any other infringement the law, for "De Milhau will get you if you don't watch out!" is the passed around, and as for speeders there was an absence of even a spurt within the village limits to-day.

Miss de Milhau is also the head of the committee arranging the dog show to be bald August 7 at the Meadow Club.

Services at St. Andrew's.

This morning there was a very large congregation attending Episcopal services in the St. Andrew's Dune Church. Bishop Edward Acheson, Suffragan Bishop of Connecticut, preached to-day. Crowley died Saturday in his home, 568 Greene avenue, Brooklyn, of uraemic poisoning.

Although Crowley made a fortune out of the one place he ever owned, retiring in 1919 with perhaps $200,000, his friends guessed, his case emphatically illustrates the blighting effect the pro hibition amendment had upon the liquor business. Starting at "Lipton's" many years ago as the cashier, bringing about the organization of a stock company which bought out Lipton the original proprietor and then acquiring control himself, Crowley built up a remarkable business. Two years before prohibitign hit the land he was offered $150,000 for the lease and good will, and he re gretted in later months that he did no accept the offer. He did retire in 1919, however, before wartime prohibition gave way to the bone dry edict of the Constitutional Amendment, and the famous old resort was turned into a drug tain attachment. As a saloon over a long and stirring period Lipton's had commanded the largest rental of any downtown saloon ,a sum stated to be Situated where it was, with one door opening into Park row and the other into Nassau street, within a stone's throw of three or four newspaper buildings, the City Hall, the courts and other municifamous writers of this and of a genera-Crowley ran the saloon with almost prohibition, losing hope almost a year before the amendment was clamped on, and made his arrangements to quit, getting what he could for the lease and for the odds and ends of the saloon fittings and furnishings. It came to a song compared to what he had been offered for the rich business, for there were fewer better patronized saloons in downtown New York. Between 10 A. M. and 10 P. M. the place was crowded every a big lunch business as well as a liquor bition cost him anywhere between $150 .-000 and $200,000 at a stroke. But he had made at least that much. He had planned a trip around the world, but disease laid him low before his plans could materialize. He was 55 years old.
